REBOUND OF THE DIVIDE.

That the Tonopah Divide district has the come-back punch is being demonstrated daily. With a little more than a week to register gains the results achieved in that district are of the appealing order, proving that the properties in actual development have not lost any of their allurements for the average speculator. The effect is visible in the sharp improvement in such securities as Tonopah Divide, Tonopah Hashrouck and Tonopah Dividend. The resiliency is almost startling for the daily market reports indicate unimpaired confidence in the future of the leading properties. Phenomenal strikes reported or implied by the sharp reaction of the market carry with them every promise of still more important gains when the district has fully regained its stride and development is in full swing as it was when the shutdown came. It does not take a seer to predict what will happen when other companies with strong treasures reach the zone where important results may be expected. The nation has become aroused to the value of silver investments and reports from New York and Boston agree that it does not require the blandishments of sales agents to bring about a general restoration of prosperity in a district that was on the threshold of important discoveries when the suspension of operations was forced. Repeal of the drastic surtaxes and a modification of income taxes will work wonders in supplementing the efforts of corporations to make 1920 a banner year for silver producers. The boom of last spring will seem like a foretaste of what is in store for Tonopah, which remains supreme as the gateway of the greatest silver belt of Nevada, the greatest of all silver states. Mines employing thousands will form a charmed circle around this camp, which will steadily expand into a commercial and financial center through which will ebb and flow the tide of development laden with treasure argosies bringing higher the bullion from a country that must always look to Tonopah as the natural gateway for handling business. While it is possible that railroads may be extended to the new mining districts, it is not probable that capital will engage in transportation problems when all requirements may be met by improved roads and economic motor truck lines. So it may be assumed that these conveyances will answer all purposes for years to come as shipping costs will be reduced through the construction of mills close to the mines, which will relieve the ores from the expensive toll of transportation and give the stockholders full benefit of the most efficient treatment.

TREATY MAKING POWERS.

Senators claim the right to amend the treaty but no such power exists except with the consent of the president, declares the New York World, mouthpiece of the administration. That may be, but it is equally true that the president claims the right to negotiate treaties but no such power exists except with "the advice and consent of the senate." Of course, if either the senate or the president attempt to be the treaty making power alone, this constitutes usurpation. President Wilson has undertaken to negotiate a treaty containing a hundred thousand words. The senate, exercising its constitutional power, proposes to add a few words to make it clear that the instrument does not sacrifice American ideals, interests and rights. For President Wilson to attempt to deny that right to the representatives of the people, on the ground that "I am the judge" as he has put it, would be to exceed his constitutional rights. And this thing of exceeding constitutional rights has gone about as far as the people of this country will permit.

PRESIDENTIAL POSSIBILITIES.

Political spellbinders and neeromancers are already weaving their charms for the next national convention. Two western cities are in the field bidding for the gathering at which the next president will be nominated. Chicago and St. Louis are the contenders for the republican love feast. The city by the lakes asserts its right to the convention but, owing to the abnormal demand for the accommodations of regular patronage, hotel owners are slow in coming forward with the guarantee fund necessary to secure the gathering which brings so much business. On the other hand, St. Louis is insisting that the success of the republican party will depend largely upon the border states that are close to the Mason and Dixon line, where the wavering hosts of democracy may flop to the ticket that is pledged to constitutional principles. The choice will depend in a measure on the action of the far western delegates whose campaign has received a substantial impetus from the league of nations canvass conducted by Hiram Johnson. The middle west and the eastern delegations are said to be lining up for Gen. Leonard Wood, representing the militant elements of the nation, combined with the aggressiveness and independence of the progressive republicans who are back in the fold of the party of Lincoln and McKinley. General Wood has not announced himself a candidate for the race, but his friends who are supposed to know his sentiments say that he is willing, at the psychological moment to resign from the army and come forward as the banner bearer of the G. O. P. Such a contest would make a most interesting race, since both men have been identified with the principles made famous by the ever popular Teddy and the choice of either would not split the party or leave any harsh feelings to be soothed during the campaign. Other names will appear between now and December when the national republican committee will be called in session. Illinois is credited with having a candidate in the person of Governor Lowden, whose administration proved one of the most admirable in the history of the party in that pivotal state which may have to compete with Indiana for a favored son. The party alignment will be clear cut with the advantage favoring the republicans on the achievements of the war administration which presents a very vulnerable front on the score of extravagances and favoritism in acquitting itself of the weighty responsibilities of the war.

Champ Clark advised the people to "eat mush." Next day the price of corn meal went up in sympathy.

Ardmore, Okla., has given the country a characteristic exhibition of the mob spirit of the Dixie Damocraatic party.

Only one sure cure for mob law has ever been discovered, and that is officers of the law with plenty of nerve, devotion to duty and ammunition.

President Wilson has not gone so far as to promise that the adoption of the unamended league of nations covenant will improve the United States postal service.

Now that President Wilson has announced his discovery that six is less than one, we know why he thinks more people favor the unamended covenant than are opposed to it.

After proving that the one or two of his points in the peace treaty were as many as the fourteen he started out with, it wasn't so very hard for President Wilson to demonstrate that six votes in the assembly of the league of nations are really a couple less than one.

Ways to Cook Inexpensive Meats

HOW TO GET TASTY MEALS

FROM CHEAPER CUTS OF MEAT

Meat is one of the chief sources of these-building-protein-food. Its food value is high, so unfortunately is the price. The average American housewife serves meat at least once a day. If the amount of meat is reduced, other food equally nutritive must be substituted. The problem with most housekeepers at present is how to keep the meat bill down and still serve palatable meals. This requires careful study and should include a knowledge of the different cuts of meat, the amount of waste and quality. If these points are understood it is not possible to purchase to the best advantage. And most important the marketing should be "personally conducted" if the best results are to be obtained.

To order by telephone often adds to the cost due to lack of details, such as the thickness, exact weight or choice of cuts, etc., which the dealer will not observe as carefully as the purchaser. Then again, the pocket man will probably take a personal interest in holding your trade if he finds you know what you want, that you are familiar with the different cuts of meat and understand their qualities.

Methods of Cooking: Depend on Conditions. The best method of cooking the different cuts of meat, the amount of waste and quality. If these points are understood it is not possible to purchase to the best advantage. And most important the marketing should be "personally conducted" if the best results are to be obtained.

the least muscular parts of the animal and tough, coarse fibered sections come from portions which are most used. One-fourth of the weight of a dressed beef consists of tender meat, and all of these cuts are expensive. The less tender cuts are just as nutritious; in fact, many of the cheaper cuts have more food value than the tender meat and are less expensive, but require more attention in their preparation. If cooked properly these cheaper cuts will be found juicy and palatable.

The value of any cut of meat depends upon the quantity of waste, bone, gristle, etc. For example, the prime ribs are even higher than they seem because the purchaser has to pay for so much bone; while some of the cheaper meats have so much waste in gristle, fat and bone that they would be equal in price to a more tender meat.

Surfaces Seared to Keep Juices in Meat.

All meat cookery is governed by two general principles. For tender, fine grained meats there should be intense heat, no liquid, and the meat should be seasoned after cooking. The high temperature sears the surface and keeps the juice from escaping. The meat is cooked quickly because being tender, it would harden and become dry if it were allowed to remain in too great a heat for a long period. It is seasoned after cooking because the salt would tend to draw out the juices, which with tender meats is not desirable. Water is not added because it would cause steam, which would affect the brown, crisp surface of the meat. Plenty of fat should be used for basting.

Coarse, tough meats require quick surface searing, long, slow cooking and a small amount of water. The meat is seared to force it to retain the greater part of the juices, and then cooked slowly in a small amount of water, which may be seasoned during the cooking process. The meat when cooked should be juicy, due to searing, and tender because of the slow cooking.

Beef More Stimulating Than Veal or Poultry.

To understand which method to use is the secret of economy in meat cookery.

Red meats, such as beef and mutton, are more stimulating than the white meat of poultry or veal. Beef is the most nutritious, mutton being second. Lamb and veal are less nutritious than the flesh of full-grown animals. Dried or smoked beef contains as much nutriment as the fresh meat, while corned beef loses in food value the brine drawing out some of the juices.

Meat is too expensive a food to be thoughtlessly purchased or carelessly cooked, and the meat bill may be reduced by making more use of the less expensive cuts.

It may be "social" unrest but it's not a forcible unrest.

If a loud voice signifies good argument, our most convincing speaker would be a mule.

Nothing makes women more judicious than to observe a cheerful widower.
